Excerpt: . . . CHAP. XL The first Attempts of the Plymouth or North Virginia Company. A particular Account of the Manner in which New England was settled. The Tranfabious of the first Colony with the Indians, and the surprising Increase of the Settlements. The Situation and Climate of New England. The Animals found there, and a minute Description of Ms Moose. The Fowls, Fish, and Produce of the Soil. The political State of the four Colonies, and a port Description of Boston, the Capital. IN the last chapter we have given a history of the settlements made by the London or South Virginia Company, and are now to mention the proceedings of the Western or Plymouth Company, as they are stiled by the writers of that age. They were for some years contented with trading with the natives of North Virginia for furs, and with sishing upon that coast; but at length two ships being employed in this sishery in the year 1614, commanded by Capt. John Smith, and Capt. Thomas Hunt, the former went on shore, took a particular view of the country of the Maffachujets, and had some skirmishes with the natives. After which, he ordered Bunt to dispose of his sish in Spain, and then return to England; bat Hunt, basely proposing to make a market of the natives, as well as of their filh, treacherously inticed 27 of the Indians on board his ship, and then setting sail with them-to Malaga, had the villainy to sell them to...
