Cox at Huron, Dakota, July 4, 1889 We did not contend for our liberties. We never lost our liberties. When the King and his Ministers strove to despoil us of our liberties, the colonies struck for Independence. They had rehearsed their traditional privileges and chartered rights as British subjects. Having failed in having these recognized, they declared for the inalienable rights of human nature. The Declaration was, in one sense, a glittering generality. But it glittered like a meteor, and became fixed above our hemisphere as a pole star, for the guidance not only of our own but of other nations seeking liberty and independence. The Articles Of Confederation. The Articles of Confederation were the first attempt towards Union. They were not fully ratified until the first day of March, 1781. They proved inadequate for the purposes of a nation. Their prime defect was in the want of power to raise revenue and to regulate commerce. In other regards they were a failure. This lamentable impotence early manifested the need of a radical change. Virginia and New York felt this most urgently, and their statesmen pioneered the path to Union through a wilderness of doubt and anxiety. The Constitutional Era - 1789. But the grand event connected with our hemisphere - the consummate flower of our struggle - was the Constitution. That instrument embodied no abstractions. It ordained concrete modes, and co-ordinate and tripartite branches for a government of general welfare. It provided machinery indispensable for the development of free enterprise and the security of our liberties. The experience which made known the defects of the Confederation, led to the...
