Excerpt: . . . face the storm, as before wisely to bend before it. According to his own principle, he had abode Gods time; and now that time was come. His end was calm and grand. If there was at times a tinge of theatrical display in his Chapter words, there was not a shadow of this in his last and 1 greatest deed. Thanks be to God! were his simple and solemn words, as the fatal sentence fell from the lips of the judge; and then, taking his way amid weeping crowds to the place of execution--an open field outside the city, surrounded with trees--he prepared himself to die. He laid aside his mantle, directed his deacon to give twentyfive pieces of gold to the executioner; then kneeling down, amid calm and silent prayer, laid his head beneath the fatal axe, and passed away It was on...
