Excerpt: . . . of the realm; nominated Lord Warden of the Stannaries in Devon and Cornwall, Lord Privy Seal, and one of the Councillors of Edward VI. , during his minority. He was constituted Lord High Steward at the coronation of that youthful monarch, and on the insurrection which broke out at Sampford Courtenay, in Devon, and which was followed by the siege of the capital of the West, Exeter, Lord Russel marched against the rebels, totally routed and dispersed them. For these services he was shortly after created Earl of Bedford. It is not the object of these notes to enter at length into the history of this ancient and noble house; suffice it to say, that William, the fifth descendant from the Earl, was, in the reign of William and Mary, created Marquis of Tavistock and Duke of Bedford, and his present worthy descendant, John Duke of Bedford, is in possession of the lands and ecclesiastical impropriations of the dissolved abbey. Having thus come to the dissolution of our monastery, something must here be said concerning the portions of the ancient buildings that still exist, notwithstanding the havoc so largely and so repeatedly made amongst them. For this purpose I have been looking over Mr. Brays manuscript notes, written several years since, respecting the remains of Tavistock Abbey. These observations may not have so much interest as he could wish; but as some of the vestiges he mentions are now no longer in existence, the...
