B-281077 ensuring that the agency's critical air traffic control-related computer systems will function properly at the turn of the century (Year 2000 computer problem). Although FAA recognized the Year 2000 initiative as a critical need and began addressing it, the agency did not document the need in a mission needs statement. The discipline associated with mission analysis - identifying the shortfall, the impact of not satisfying the shortfall, and an estimate of the resources the agency should commit to resolve the need - might have eliminated the need to reprogram funds to meet this priority. Additionally, the agency reprogrammed 28.9 million for additional requirements for its new automation system for terminal controllers. Included in this amount were funds to implement solutions to address design concerns identified by human operators of the system. As a result of the reprogramming, the schedule for some projects may have to be...
